

U.S. History

About the Course

Read about U.S. history from 1800-1900 through books that immerse students in the time period and allow them to see the world through the eyes of those who lived it. Through engaging narratives, history spines, primary source documents, and books that show different perspectives, students come to see history as more than dates and events and develop relationships with people from the past. Viewing images, looking at maps, and working on one's Book of Centuries are also part of developing this relationship.

This topic is included in the following course(s): History: Grades 7-8 (U.S.)

Placement & Combining Tips

U.S. history may be suitable for 9th graders as well if combining.

How To Teach

Prepare

- Read through the lesson and gather any necessary links.
- If you have not read the book, you may want to read the selected pages in advance.
- Decide which lessons/books to read together and which to have students read independently.

Recap

- Connect back to the previous lesson. Have students give a summary of what they remember. (Full narration is not necessary.)
- If the previous passage is difficult to remember, teachers may ask a leading question: "What can you tell me about..." Or students may try looking back at any chapter/section headings or illustrations or reading the first paragraph to jog the memory.

Introduce

- Use a picture, map, or engaging question to pique the student's interest in the day's lesson (often included in lesson plans).
- If necessary, talk about a few unfamiliar words that will be crucial to understanding.

Read

- Read the day's passage out loud or have the student read independently. Sometimes reading for the specified time is a better guide.
- If a book is challenging, try stopping to narrate every now and then rather than waiting until the end. It can also help to read aloud. Or you might want to use an audiobook version of the text and have students read along with it.
- Have students keep an eye out for events or characters to add to their Citizenship Notebook, Book of Centuries, or Copywork Book.

Narrate

- Have students retell the passage orally or write a narration.
- Alternatively, students might analyze a character, trace cause to consequence, outline a passage, or use one of the other methods indicated by Charlotte Mason in School Education Chapter 16, especially p.180.
- Students who enjoy writing can experiment with different types of written narrations, but this is not required.

Discuss

- Give the student an opportunity to share thoughts on the lesson and any connections made (orally or in writing).

- You could ask them what they thought about the passage or ask an open-ended question to stimulate discussion. Discussion questions are often included in the lesson plans.

Connect

- Optional: Add something to the Book of Centuries, Century Chart, Citizenship Notebook, or Commonplace book. If students would like to include pictures, these may be drawn or printed.

WEEK 1 30m U.S. History: Grades 7-8 - Lesson 1

The War of 1812

Materials: PDF Link

→ INTRO

1. This year you are studying the time period 1800-1900. The books we are reading begin in 1820. Today's lesson will highlight some significant events that happened before 1820, and we will begin the book next week. The American Revolution ended in 1783 with the signing of the Treaty of Paris, where the U.S. was acknowledged as a sovereign nation. In 1800, the U.S. population totaled 5.3 million, including one million African Americans, of whom 900,000 were enslaved.

2. Imagine what life was like in the U.S. in the early 1800's. Describe what you know about transportation, communication, food production, and clothing. Many important inventions were created during this time, and people's way of life changed due to the Industrial Revolution. Watch this video to learn more about this.

The Beginning of the Story

Materials: Sacajawea

→ INTRO

By the age of 16, Sacajawea had been kidnapped from her tribe, gambled away to be a man's second wife, and was pregnant with that man's baby. That's when she would join the journey of Meriwether Lewis and William Clark down the Mississippi River and to the Pacific Ocean. But, where did her story begin?

Joseph Bruchac will explore the early life of Sacajawea as well as recount her journey with Lewis and Clark, which became one of the most famous expeditions to take place in American History. While it is well researched and Joseph Bruchac uses primary sources like the journals of Lewis and Clark as support for the story, it remains a work of fiction. There is much that we don't know about Sacajawea's story.

→ READ, NARRATE, & DISCUSS

→ INTRO
Sacajawea found herself able to help the expedition in more ways than just translating for her people. Growing up in the village, she knew that there would come a time when it would be impossible to hunt and that the survival of people depended on finding food in other ways. Mainly, she taught them how to forage for edible roots.

There would be more difficulties than just running low on food. One of the largest would be grizzly bears. Even though Lewis and Clark were outfitted with guns and bullets, they had a hard time taking down the grizzlies, which caused Captain Lewis to say, “these bears being so hard to die rather intimidates me.” A canoe nearly sank, animals charged their tents, and Sacajawea came down with an illness.

This historical novel is based on the building of the transcontinental railroad, which took place from 1863-1869. It was an arduous, dangerous job for the men who signed up to do it. Historians estimate that at any one time as many as 10,000 to 15,000 Chinese were working on constructing the railroad. It took more than four years to complete the western section of the railroad and connect the coasts. This story will bring this time period to life and give you a glimpse of what those workers endured so they could send money back to their families in China. Upon completion of the railroad, some workers went back to China; others stayed in America to work in agriculture, mining, logging, or domestic service or work in

1. Foot binding — the practice of applying tight binding to the feet of young girls to prevent further growth — was a Chinese custom historically associated with the wealthy. Small feet were considered more attractive and, therefore, necessary to find a more suitable partner. It was banned in 1911, but the practice continued in rural areas until circa 1949, when women were forced to remove the bindings on their "lotus feet" by governmental decree.

Why did the Chinese call America "Gold Mountain"?

In the 1840s, the news circled the globe: There was gold in California, and fortunes could be made by anyone who seized the opportunity. Within weeks, dreamers from far and wide came streaming into America's port cities, hoping to stake a claim and strike it rich. China was not immune to this new gold fever. Word of a mountain of gold across the ocean arrived in Hong Kong in 1849, and quickly spread throughout the Chinese provinces. By 1851, 25,000 Chinese immigrants had left their homes and moved to California, a land some came to call gam saan, or "gold mountain." (from History of Congress website)

→ VIEW

Throughout the lessons, you will be watching segments from a webinar that was hosted by the Chinese Railroad Workers in North America Project at Stanford University. Some people might think that history is about dates and events and that there is nothing new to find out about the past. But when we look at primary sources, there might be "new stories" to uncover that are not part of the usual narrative. That is what historians do. They study primary sources to answer questions about the past. Primary sources are forms of evidence that come directly from the period or persons or events we are seeking to understand. These can be journals, letters, photos, newspapers, and other writings. That is what this project is about. We don't know a lot about the Chinese railroad workers who came to America in the late 1800s to find jobs and build America. These historians are trying to bring these stories to us.

This segment talks about the project and the kinds of primary sources they studied.

Architecture

Materials: Notebook

→ INTRO

Today, we will look at another architectural style influenced by the Old World—Gothic Revival. These homes in the 1800s were romantic adaptations of medieval architecture. Delicate wooden ornaments and other decorative details suggested the architecture of medieval England. These homes did not try to replicate authentic Gothic styles—no flying buttresses were needed to hold up the Gothic Revival homes found throughout America. Instead, they became the elegant farm homes of a growing America. Here are some of the characteristics:

- Pointed windows with decorative tracery
- Grouped chimneys
- Pinnacles (spires or peaks)
- Leaded glass
- Quatrefoil and clover-shaped windows
- Oriel windows- bay window that projects from an upper floor and is supported by a bracket

By 1861, an engineer named Theodore Judah had enlisted a group of investors in Sacramento to form the Central Pacific Railroad Company. He then headed to Washington, D.C., where he was able to convince congressional leaders, as well as President Lincoln, who signed the Pacific Railroad Act into law the following year. The Central Pacific Railroad Company would start building in Sacramento and continue east across the Sierra Nevada, while a second company, the Union Pacific Railroad, would build westward from the Missouri River, near the Iowa-Nebraska border.

The two lines of track would meet in the middle (the bill did not designate an exact location), and each company would receive 6,400 acres of land (later doubled to 12,800) and $48,000 in government bonds for every mile of track built. From the beginning, then, the building of the transcontinental railroad was set up in terms of a competition between the two companies. (from history.com)

Meeting Louis Hughes

Materials: A Year in the South: 1865

→ INTRO

In 1832, a baby boy was born around Charlottesville, Virginia. His name would be Louis Hughes, and he was the son of a black mother and a white father. Louis would marry, have children, and live through the events of the Civil War. In his old age, he would write a memoir, sharing his life story.

In A Year in the South, author and Civil War historian Stephen Ash uses Louis Hughes' memoir and other additional primary sources to detail one of the most eventful years in the history of the United States: 1865. This is the year that the Civil War would come to an end. But what did the victory of the Civil War mean for the men and women still enslaved in the South? When did freedom come? These are just a few of the questions Stephen Ash will answer in his book.

Meeting Cornelia McDonald

Materials: A Year in the South: 1865

→ INTRO

In the prologue of A Year in the South, Stephen Ash introduces his audience to Cornelia McDonald. He writes, "When 1865 began, Cornelia McDonald was forty-two years old and living in a rented house in Lexington, Virginia, with her seven children. She was a widow and a war refugee. The death of her husband, a Confederate army officer, and the loss of her home had brought her to the verge of poverty and despair."

Cornelia McDonald was born in Virginia. She was born in 1822 to a well-off family. Her family had owned slaves, and she had grown up never needing to work with her hands. How does the victory of the Union in 1865 impact this young mother and widow? Author and Civil War historian Stephen Ash will use many different primary sources to piece together this young woman's story.

Louis Hughes in the Spring

Materials: A Year in the South: 1865

→ INTRO

Like many enslaved women and men, Louis Hughes had dreams of being free. He would run away a couple of times, and every time he received a punishment. His story highlights the evil that we must face as those who study history. Humans are capable of great evil towards each other. Sin is a part of the human experience, and we can trace it to every place and every time.

In his book, Why Study History, John Fea writes, "Indeed, anyone who studies the past realizes that there are no heroes in history. While people may perform heroic acts, all humans are tainted by sin and are susceptible to acting in ways that preference themselves over others and God. Historians understand, perhaps better than most, the reality of the pain, suffering, injustice, anger, and vice brought on by sin. In other words, they understand the tragic dimensions of life."

History reminds us of the inherent weakness in the human condition and the very real possibility that our fellow human beings are capable of horrendous things. This should humble us, for "there, but for the grace of God, go I." One day, there will be a new heaven and new earth where there will be no more death or mourning or crying or pain.

Cornelia McDonald and Louis Hughes in Fall

Materials: A Year in the South: 1865

→ INTRO

1865 was a year marked by many uncertainties. As men and women were freed from the bondage of slavery, they would need to find homes, jobs, and safe havens where they could relish their freedom. And households that had built their wealth on the backs of slaves would need to transition quickly to be able to sustain themselves. The year 1865 would be one of the most tumultuous years in the history of the United States, but the fight for freedom didn't end with the Emancipation Proclamation or the winning of the Civil War. The rest of the 1800s would be filled with a struggle for equality that was just beginning.
