About the Course

Students learn to love the sight and sound of words through daily poetry reading covering a wide variety of poems. They also enjoy short picture book biographies and accessible poems corresponding to the historical time period as relevant, and lesson plans occasionally point out interesting poetic features.

Poetry: Grades 1-4

How To Teach

Overview

Poetry reading should be brief and pleasurable. There are also many lovely picture books of poems to include as free reads at this age (see Extra Helpings). Remember that poems are like paintings--they not only convey ideas, they create an experience with the sound of words, the way the words are arranged, and the emotions, thoughts, and images they evoke.

Read

Read the poem aloud a time or two. As students gain reading fluency, let them read the poem as well. It is helpful to hear poetry read by different voices. Try to read paying attention to the punctuation as well as the line breaks to get the sense of the poem.

Discuss

Allow students to share any thoughts or connections. What are your impressions of the poem? Talk about anything that stood out to you: the images, ideas, words, phrases, sounds, or even physical look of the poem. What kinds of things is the poem about?

Reread

Read the poem aloud again. Poetry is meant to be savored like a chocolate that you roll around in your mouth until the last bit melts.

Term 1

WEEK 1 5m Poetry: Grades 1-4 - Lesson 1

Materials: Over the River and Through the Wood

→ NOTE

You will usually spend one week reading the poems from around 5 pages of the book (depending on the size of the illustrations and length of poems). You can pick 1-3 to read each day and reread them as much as you like. Poetry is made to be read many times. Lessons give some ideas for discussing a particular poem, but those are only suggestions. You'll also focus particularly on getting to know the poet Rabindranath Tagore in Term 1, Effie Lee Newsom in Term 2, and Emma Lazarus in Term 3. Feel free to use the index of the book to look up other poems by poets you particularly like.

→ INTRO

Almost all the poems we'll read this year were written from 1800 to 1900 AD (the time period you'll learn about in many of your other lessons as well). So, as you read, imagine children like you listening to these same poems about 200 years ago! First, let's start by reading a poem about poetry.

→ READ & DISCUSS

p.31-36 Chapter: Growing Things
Pick and choose poems from these pages over the week.
(Read one time, discuss, and then reread the poems.)

★ TEACHER NOTE

Optional: Read the Introduction and share information with students throughout the year.

Note: The "Holidays" chapter of Over the River and Through the Woods is not scheduled until term 3. Feel free to also read from that chapter during Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's, etc.

WEEK 1 5m Poetry: Grades 1-4 - Lesson 2

Materials: Over the River and Through the Wood

→ INTRO

Our poem today is by Paul Lawrence Dunbar. He was one of the first Black Americans to earn a living as a writer, and he inspired many other writers after him. He also became friends with Orville Wright and his brother Wilbur (who you may remember as the inventors of the airplane)! The Wright brothers owned a printing press and published Dunbar's first writings.

→ READ & DISCUSS

p.36 "The Seedling" by Paul Lawrence Dunbar

- Do you notice how the seedling starts talking in the poem? Have you ever heard a seedling talk? Of course not! Poets sometimes imagine that things like plants or animals can talk to help us think about them in new ways. The fancy word for this is "personification." Do you notice any other examples of the seed doing things only people normally do?

★ TEACHER NOTE

Optional: This glossary from the Poetry Foundation may be useful for teachers, though terms will be described in the lesson plans.

∞ Link: Glossary of Poetic Terms

Personification is sometimes confused with anthropomorphism, which is when animals or objects actually behave like humans. (Think of Peter Rabbit walking on two legs and wearing clothing as an example of anthropomorphism.)

WEEK 1 5m Poetry: Grades 1-4 - Lesson 3

Materials: Over the River and Through the Wood

→ READ & DISCUSS

p.31 "Tree Feelings" by Charlotte Perkins Gilman

- What human traits does the poet give the trees or seeds?

p.31-36 Chapter: Growing Things

WEEK 1 □ 5m Poetry: Grades 1-4 - Lesson 5

□ Materials: Crescent Moon

→ INTRO

Rabindranath Tagore was born in 1861 in Calcutta, India, and grew up in a family that loved art, music, and ideas. He was a poet, short-story writer, composer, playwright, and painter who spent his life creating in many different ways. In 1913, he became the first non-European writer to be awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature. He also composed the national anthems for both India and Bangladesh, making his words a lasting part of two nations. Once a week this term, we'll explore poems by Rabindranath Tagore exploring themes like mothers, children, and nature.

WEEK 2 □ 5m Poetry: Grades 1-4 - Lesson 6

□ Materials: Over the River and Through the Wood

→ READ & DISCUSS

p.50 "In Blossom Time" by Ina Coolbrith

- Notice that each verse has exactly four lines. Poems often have many different types of hidden structure to make the words sing. Another type of pattern in the poem is rhyme. Notice how the last words in the 2nd and 4th lines of each verse sound similar. Can you come up with some rhyming words?

WEEK 2 □ 5m Poetry: Grades 1-4 - Lesson 7

□ Materials: Over the River and Through the Wood

→ READ & DISCUSS

p.44 "Prairie Fires" by Eudora May Stone and p.46 "The Mushroom's Soliloquy" by Hannah Flagg Gould

- Keep an eye out for hidden patterns in poems. Do they have a set number of lines for each verse? Can you hear or see any rhymes?
- A soliloquy is when a character speaks their private thoughts or feelings out loud without anyone else around to hear them. What are some of the mushroom's thoughts?

★ TEACHER NOTE

"Prairie Fires" on page 44 is a good example of a quatrain (4 lines per stanza) with an ABAB rhyme scheme. (Students can simply point out which words rhyme. Specific rhyme schemes will be taught in later grades.)

"The Mushroom's Soliloquy" on page 46 is also a good example of a quatrain and has an ABBB rhyme scheme.

"The Johnny Cake" on page 45 has three lines per stanza, which is called a tercet. The rhyme scheme is ABB. The pace of a

John Greenleaf Whittier is known as a passionate abolitionist opposing slavery long before the Civil War, a prolific writer, and a friend to several other famous writers. During his lifetime, he became one of America's most popular poets. He also ran for Congress twice and remained involved in politics throughout his life. He spent his later years writing about religion, nature, and country life. He moved in a remarkable circle of friends that included abolitionist Frederick Douglass, poets Ralph Waldo Emerson and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, and novelist Mark Twain.

Louisa May Alcott grew up in Concord, Massachusetts. Her family was neighbors and friends with several famous writers and poets, all of whom influenced her love of writing from an early age. She wrote novels, short stories, and poetry that often drew on her own life and the social causes she cared about. Her poetry also often reflected a love of nature, finding meaning and beauty in the natural world.

LMA uses an ABCB rhyme scheme in the first 8 lines, but then changes to an AABCCB scheme in the refrain (the last 6 lines). This creates a "bouncing" effect much like bees bouncing from flower to flower. The poem almost sounds like a song or hymn when read aloud.

Helen Hunt Jackson experienced many hardships in her life. She turned to writing to help her through her grief and went on to publish poetry, children's books, and travel writing. She also happened to grow up as a close friend of poet Emily Dickinson! Later in life, Jackson became a fierce champion for Native American rights, writing a book called A Century of Dishonor (1881) after hearing a moving speech by Chief Standing Bear and then writing a novel called Ramona (1884) that told the story of California's displaced Mission Indians.

Emily Dickinson spent almost her whole life in Amherst, Massachusetts, rarely leaving her family home. She was a serious gardener who grew all kinds of flowers and plants, and you can see her love of nature in her poems, which are full of flowers, bees, and changing seasons that she observed right in her own backyard. Even though she only published a small handful of poems while she was alive, she secretly wrote nearly 1,800 of them, and most weren't discovered until after she died in 1886. Today, she's considered one of the greatest American poets. Imagine her going back and forth between her garden and her writing desk, getting inspired by everything she saw growing around her.

Eugene Field was an American poet, journalist, and humorist who built a remarkable career working his way through newspapers across the Midwest, eventually becoming one of the most widely read columnists in the United States. Known as "The Children's Poet," he wrote more than a dozen volumes of poetry and created some of the most beloved children's poems in American literature. His writing was deeply personal, drawing on memories of his New England childhood, his marriage, and the joys of raising a large family. He claimed to be terrible with money and had all his earnings sent directly to his wife to manage.

He became the most popular American poet of his time, writing famous works like "Paul Revere's Ride" and "The Song of Hiawatha." Some of his phrases (like "ships that pass in the night") became so well known that people still use them today without even knowing Longfellow wrote them. Walt Whitman grew up in Brooklyn, New York, left school at 11 to go to work, and went on to become one of the most important poets in American history. He self-published his famous poetry collection Leaves of Grass in 1855, which broke all the rules with its bold, free-flowing style, and he kept revising it his whole life. During the Civil War, he volunteered as a nurse caring for wounded soldiers, and the experience inspired some of his most powerful poems. His influence has never faded, and his idea

You might not know her name, but you definitely know her work. Sarah Josepha Hale wrote "Mary Had a Little Lamb" and is also the woman most responsible for making Thanksgiving a national holiday! Born in New Hampshire in 1788, she turned to writing after her husband died young, leaving her with five children to support. She went on to publish poetry, novels, and essays throughout her life. She became the first female editor of an American magazine, using her platform to champion women's education and employment at a time when very few women had access to either. She spent 17 years writing letters to five different presidents lobbying for a national Thanksgiving holiday and finally succeeded in 1863 when President Lincoln made it official!

Christina Moody was a young African American poet who did something truly remarkable: she published her own book of poetry called A Tiny Spark when she was just sixteen years old! Her poems were bold and brave for their time, tackling big questions like what it really means to be Black in America and the complicated feelings of pledging allegiance to a country that didn't treat all of its people equally. The book is incredibly rare today, with only a handful of copies known to exist in the entire world. Not much is known about Christina's life beyond this one extraordinary book, but she was a courageous and talented young woman who deserves to be remembered.

Fenton Johnson was born in 1888 into one of Chicago's wealthiest African American families and attended top universities like the University of Chicago and Columbia. He wrote bold, free-verse poems about what life was really like for African Americans in the city, which was groundbreaking for his time. He even started his own literary magazines to help get new voices heard. He's considered one of the key figures who helped set the stage for the Harlem Renaissance, the incredible explosion of African American art, music, and literature that took off in the 1920s. Robert Frost is one of the most famous poets in American history, but his road to success was anything but smooth. He dropped out of college twice, worked as a chicken farmer, and had barely been published until he was almost 40! Desperate for a fresh start, he packed up his whole family and sailed to England in 1912. British publishers loved his writing, and he came back to America a celebrity. John Greenleaf Whittier grew up on a farm in Massachusetts in the early 1800s, where his love of reading sparked a passion for writing poetry. His sister secretly sent one of his poems to a newspaper, which kicked off his whole career. Whittier became one of the loudest voices against slavery in America, even when it was dangerous to do so. He helped found the American Anti-Slavery Society and signed the Anti-Slavery Declaration of 1833. Clement Clarke Moore was born in 1779 in New York City and became a college professor of ancient languages. On Christmas Eve 1822, he reportedly wrote a fun poem just to entertain his kids. That poem, "Account Of A Visit from St. Nicholas," was the first to give Santa's reindeer their names and went on to become one of the most beloved Christmas poems ever. It was published anonymously in a New York newspaper in 1823, and Moore didn't claim authorship until 1844. However, the family of another writer, Henry Livingston Jr., argued that he was the real author! Computer analysis in the early 2000s even suggested the poem had more in common with Livingston's known writing style than Moore's. So, the mystery of who really wrote "'Twas the Night Before Christmas" may never be fully solved!

WEEK 2 5m Poetry: Grades 1-4 - Lesson 130

Materials: Emma's Poem

→ READ & DISCUSS

Read "The New Colossus" poem by Emma Lazarus on the last page of the book. A woman named Emma Lazarus wrote this poem in 1883 about the Statue of Liberty.

- If you turn to the next-to-last page, you can see a drawing of the Statue of Liberty. Have you visited or seen pictures of this United States monument before?

Read three or four pages of the book. Alternatively, you may choose to read the entire book in one lesson if time allows, and substitute with poems not scheduled or that you want to revisit in the coming weeks.

James Russell Lowell was born in 1819 in Cambridge, Massachusetts. He graduated from Harvard but was banned from the graduation ceremonies for breaking the rules! During his suspension, he stayed with a reverend in Concord, where he met poets Ralph Waldo Emerson and Henry David Thoreau, though his relationship with Thoreau would later sour. He skipped a career in law to pursue writing instead. His wife Maria strongly opposed slavery and pushed him toward more active involvement in the abolitionist cause. The couple gave their own money to help people escaping enslavement, even when times were tough financially. In 1849, he contributed toward purchasing a slave's freedom, writing, "if my poems were more popular, my gifts should be larger." Lowell also joined the Boston Vigilance Committee, a group that provided shelter, clothing, money, and safe passage to slaves seeking freedom on the Underground Railroad. Lowell became the first editor of the Atlantic Monthly and even served as U.S. ambassador to Spain and Great Britain.

Materials: Over the River and Through the Wood

→ INTRO

In the last lesson, we read about poet James Russell Lowell. Later in life, Lowell succeeded his friend and fellow poet Henry Wadsworth Longfellow as Professor of Modern Languages at Harvard University. Today we'll read one of Longfellow's most famous poems titled "Paul Revere's Ride" on pages 410-413 about this famous event during the American Revolutionary War. Though "Paul Revere's Ride" is on the surface about a Revolutionary War event, it was written on the cusp of the Civil War. The poem was meant as a call to arms, rousing northerners to action as war loomed.

Materials: Emma's Poem

→ READ & DISCUSS

Read three or four pages of the book. Alternatively, you may choose to read the entire book in one lesson if time allows, and substitute with poems not scheduled or that you want to revisit in the coming weeks.

- The book mentions that "in the 1880s people believed that a fine lady like Emma should not mingle with poor people." Why do you think that was? (See Teacher's Note as needed.)

★ TEACHER NOTE

Some people in the Victorian Era thought poverty was due to a moral failing and that the poor were less intelligent (or less able to learn). They may have also been concerned about the diseases that sometimes spread when poor families often had to live in small apartments (sometimes several families to an apartment) without running water or convenient ways to keep clean.

If your students are familiar with Charlotte Mason, you can share that she lived in this same time period. She felt strongly that all children were equally capable of learning and deserved a good education.

Oliver Wendell Holmes was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts. He became a professor of anatomy at Harvard Medical School and was eventually made its dean, a position he held until 1882. He was also one of the "Fireside Poets," beloved for writing poetry that families could enjoy together. His most famous poem, "Old Ironsides," helped save the historic warship USS Constitution from being scrapped by the Navy. His son was Oliver Wendell Holmes Jr., who became an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Holmes Jr. graduated from Harvard in 1861, right as the Civil War was breaking out, and enlisted in the Union Army. He was wounded three times, and his father wrote a famous essay about frantically searching for his son after the Battle of Antietam.

Lucy Larcom was born in 1824 in Beverly, Massachusetts, the ninth of ten children. She loved books from a very early age and read everything she could find. According to her autobiography, she wrote and self-published her own poetry collections at just seven years old! When her father died and her family needed money, she went to work in a cotton mill at age eleven, but she never stopped writing. She grew up to become a well-known poet, teacher, and author whose words are still remembered today.

William Oland Bourne was a writer, minister, and helper of others who lived during the time of the Civil War. When soldiers were wounded in battle and lost their arms, he created a special newsletter called The Soldier's Friend to support them. Bourne even organized left-handed handwriting contests for veterans who had lost their right arms. Because of his work standing up for people with disabilities, he is considered a pioneer in disability rights. He also wrote poetry, books of fables, and stories for children.

James Whitcomb Riley was a poet from Greenfield, Indiana, who loved making up rhymes even as a little kid. His very first poems were valentines he made for his friends! He skipped out on school as much as he could, preferring to wander outside and read on his own. He worked all kinds of odd jobs before becoming famous as a writer. He wrote about everyday people and the Indiana countryside in the way people actually talked, earning the nicknames "the Hoosier Poet" and "the Children's Poet." His best-known poems include "Little Orphant Annie" (which we read earlier) and "The Raggedy Man."
